

RESEARCH & DIGITAL PRESENCE AUDIT

Bilqees Razia Laghari Welfare Trust (BRWT)

A desk-research report prepared to support the planning and design of a new, premium ('VIP') organizational website

Prepared by: Claude (Anthropic) — Independent Desk Research
Version 3 — Updated with Figures Provided Directly by BRWT · Date: June 27, 2026
Scope: Publicly available, open-source information only

DATA GAP — Read this before anything else

This report is built strictly from what is verifiable in public sources, plus figures provided directly by a BRWT representative. Gold cards mark confirmed data gaps; teal cards mark facts sourced from BRWT's own published website; navy cards mark figures provided directly by BRWT (self-reported, not independently verifiable online — completely normal for an NGO's own impact reporting).

Note on naming: this brief was requested under the name “Leghari”. The Trust's own published material consistently spells the family name “Laghari”. This report follows the Trust's own spelling throughout for accuracy and brand consistency.

SECTION 01

Executive Summary

This report documents an in-depth, open-source research exercise on the Bilqees Razia Laghari Welfare Trust (BRWT), conducted to support the design of a new, premium website for the organization. Research covered BRWT's official website, general and image search engines, Urdu-language sources, social media platforms (Facebook, Instagram, LinkedIn, X), NGO directories, and Pakistani regulatory/registration references (SECP, Social Welfare Department).

The headline finding is that BRWT currently has a very thin public digital footprint. Outside of its own single website, no social media profile, press coverage, annual report, donor listing, or third-party directory entry could be located anywhere. The website itself still contains unreplaced design-template placeholder text in at least one section, which indicates the site was never fully finished or updated after its initial build (a timestamp on the page points to late 2019).

As a direct consequence, almost none of the specific statistics requested for this report — number of computer labs, students trained and placed, vocational/silai centres and graduates, medical/eye/hepatitis/HIV camp beneficiaries, hand pumps and wells installed, mass marriages conducted, or scholarships awarded — exist in any public record. This is not a failure of the research; it is the most important finding of the research. It means two things for the website project:

- Any numbers used on the new website must come directly from BRWT's leadership, not from the internet — there is nothing online to verify or cite.
- BRWT's current online presence dramatically under-represents whatever real work it does on the ground, which is itself a strong, honest justification for investing in a proper, premium website.

Sections 3–7 below set out everything that is confirmed (organization name, contact details, current leadership, and the two cause areas the Trust does publicly claim — general education and Hepatitis/HIV awareness). Section 8 is a full audit of the existing website. Section 9 gives concrete design recommendations, and Section 10 is a ready-to-use starter style guide — colour palettes, font pairings and imagery direction — for the new site. Section 11 gives a short, ready-to-use list of questions to put directly to BRWT's leadership so the real founding story and impact numbers can be obtained first-hand.

PROVIDED BY BRWT — Update — headline figures now received

Since the first edition of this report, a BRWT representative has provided several of the impact figures this report originally flagged as missing — including students trained, eye-camp results, hand pumps installed, mass-marriage couples, COVID-19 relief, and a flood-relief operation. These are presented in the new Section 6.1, clearly marked as self-reported organizational figures (standard for an NGO's own impact reporting, and not independently verifiable through public search — consistent with Section 2's findings). A shorter list of items still needed before launch is in Section 6.2.

SECTION 02

Methodology & Sources Checked

The following source categories were searched and checked. No paid databases or private records were accessed; everything below is publicly accessible.

Source Category	What Was Checked	Result
Official website	bilqeesraziatrust.org — homepage content, structure, leadership listing	Found — limited, template-based
General web search	Trust name, founders, board, Larkana/Sindh context, registration, office address	Minimal results beyond own site
Urdu-language search	Trust name in Urdu script and common variants	No dedicated results found
Image search	Logo, branding, visual identity	No distinct logo/branding located
Social media	Facebook, Instagram, LinkedIn, X (Twitter)	No official profile located
NGO directories / forums	Pakistani NGO listing threads, charity directories	Trust not listed in checked directories
Regulatory references	SECP, Social Welfare Department general guidance	General process info only; no BRWT-specific filing surfaced in search

Note: the absence of a result in a search engine does not prove an official registration or record does not exist — it only means it is not indexed or discoverable through public search. BRWT may well be properly registered with relevant authorities; confirming this directly with the Trust (Section 11) is recommended before publishing any registration claims on the new website.

SECTION 03

Organizational Profile — Confirmed Facts

Field	Detail
Full name	Bilqees Razia Laghari Welfare Trust
Common short form	Bilqees Razia Trust
Website	bilqeesraziatrust.org
Email	info@bilqeesraziatrust.org

Field	Detail
Phone	+92 346 0205203
Geographic focus	Pakistan, with explicit emphasis on Sindh (the site specifically names Sindh in connection with Hepatitis)
Stated cause areas	1) General education (“Education for Everyone”) 2) HIV/AIDS awareness – “Stop & Cure” 3) Hepatitis awareness – “Stop & Cure”
Stated mission framing	Service and compassion as the purpose of life; teamwork toward “a healthier Pakistan”

CONFIRMED — What this tells us

BRWT publicly positions itself around three things: basic education access, and public-health awareness on Hepatitis and HIV/AIDS — both major public-health issues in Sindh. Nothing in the current public material mentions computer labs, vocational/silai centres, eye camps, hand pumps/wells, mass marriages, or scholarships as named programs. These may well be real, active programs run by the Trust on the ground — they simply are not documented anywhere public yet.

SECTION 04

Leadership / Board — Confirmed Facts

The Trust's website lists four named office-holders, all currently surnamed Laghari:

Role	Name
Chairperson	Haji Zaffar Ali Khan Laghari
Vice Chairman	Qambar Ali Khan Laghari
General Secretary	Dr. Naeem Ahmed Laghari
Coordinator	Dr. Ahmed Sultan Laghari

DATA GAP — Team size

No published figure exists anywhere for total staff, paid employees, or active volunteers. This number must be requested directly from the Chairperson's or General Secretary's office (contact details above).

SECTION 05

Trust History & the Story of “Bilquees” and “Razia”

No founding date, registration year, biography, or personal story for “Bilqees” and “Razia” could be located in any public source — not on the Trust’s own website, not in news coverage, not in any directory. The current leadership team (Section 4) consists entirely of men from the Laghari family, which is consistent with — but does not by itself confirm — a common pattern among Pakistani welfare trusts of naming the organization in memory of a deceased mother, sister, or other female family member, with surviving relatives running it afterward. Comparable examples found during this research include the Razia Sheikh Welfare Trust (an eye hospital founded by and later named for a deceased headmistress) and the Bilqees Sarwar Foundation (a family charitable arm named for a Sarwar-family matriarch).

DATA GAP — Founders’ story

Whether “Bilqees” and “Razia” were sisters, what their personal background was, and what specifically motivated the Trust’s founding is not documented anywhere public. This is precisely the kind of material that makes the strongest, most emotionally compelling content for a new “WOW factor” website — but it can only come from a direct conversation with the family/leadership. A ready-to-use interview question list is provided in Section 11.

SECTION 06

Programs & Project Statistics — Status of Each Item Requested

This section was originally a single gap-analysis table. Following direct input from a BRWT representative on June 27, 2026, it now has two parts: Section 6.1 lists the headline figures the Trust has provided directly and which are ready to use on the new website; Section 6.2 lists what is still needed before launch.

PROVIDED BY BRWT — A note on how to read this section

The figures in 6.1 are self-reported organizational statistics, provided directly by BRWT rather than found through public search — this is completely normal for an NGO’s own impact reporting (every comparable trust in Section 7 presents its own self-reported numbers the same way). They could not be independently verified through public sources, consistent with the overall digital-footprint findings in Section 2. They are presented here exactly as provided, ready to use as real website content.

6.1 Confirmed Figures — Provided Directly by BRWT

Programme Area	Figure Provided by BRWT
Computer Education	7,000+ students trained to date
Eye Camps	16 eye camps held; 28 successful cataract operations performed

Programme Area	Figure Provided by BRWT
Hand Pumps / Wells (clean water)	3,000+ hand pumps installed to date
Mass / Combined Marriages	25 couples (orphaned & needy girls) married through Trust-organized combined ceremonies
COVID-19 Emergency Relief	Ration distributed to 5,000+ families during the pandemic
Annual Eid Relief Programme	Eid clothes and ration distributed every year to orphaned students and needy families (ongoing annual programme; exact yearly headcount not yet provided)
Flood Relief Operation	A three-month flood rescue and relief operation, feeding approximately 6,000 flood-affected people daily; separate ration and medical camps were also held during the response

6.2 Still to Confirm Before the Website Goes Live

The remaining items below were not part of the figures provided and should still be confirmed directly with BRWT leadership (see the question list in Section 11).

Programme Area	What's Still Needed
Computer Education	Number of active computer labs; current enrollment; number of students placed in jobs
Vocational Training / Silai Centres	Whether this is an active programme; if so, number of centres and women/girls trained
General Medical Camps (routine, non-disaster)	Total number held outside disaster response, and patients treated
Hepatitis Screening Camps	Number of camps held and patients screened
HIV Screening Camps	Number of camps held and patients screened
Scholarships	Number of students supported and at what education levels
Team size	Total paid staff and active volunteers
History & founders	Founding year and the personal story of Bilqees and Razia
Registration	Legal registration authority and year

DATA GAP — Important — please read before the website goes live

Publish the Section 6.1 figures with confidence — they came directly from the Trust. For the Section 6.2 items, avoid presenting an estimated or invented number as fact; it is far better to describe an unconfirmed programme qualitatively (with photos, once available) than to publish a guessed figure. Publishing invented numbers would carry real reputational and donor-trust risk.

SECTION 07

Sector Benchmark — How Comparable Pakistani Trusts Present Impact Data

To inform the new website's design, it is useful to see how similarly-sized Pakistani welfare trusts publicly present their impact data once they have it. These are independent organizations, included here purely as a style/structure benchmark — not affiliated with BRWT.

Organization	How they present impact (style reference)
Razia Sheikh Welfare Trust (Lahore)	A single running counter on the homepage: total patients seen and total surgeries performed over the Trust's history, updated periodically, anchored to a clear founding story about its founder.
Bilqees Sarwar Foundation (Lahore)	Program-by-program impact blocks (hospital, dialysis centre, scholarships) each with a concrete number and a named project, plus a clear corporate-family origin story.
Saylani Welfare Trust (Karachi)	Large-scale dashboard-style reporting across dozens of program categories, citing specific annual spend and beneficiary counts, reinforced with photos/video of camps in action.

The common thread across all three: every number shown is concrete, attributed to a named program, and tied to a real, identifiable founding figure. This is the bar a new BRWT site should aim for — but only once equivalent real numbers are confirmed internally (Section 11).

SECTION 08

Current Website & Digital Presence Audit

8.1 What the current site actually contains

Element	Finding
Structure	Appears to be a single, largely one-page-style site built on a generic template

Element	Finding
Content freshness	A page timestamp dates the last visible update to November 2019
Placeholder text	At least one content block still contains unreplaced design-template filler text, never swapped out for real copy
Statistics / impact section	None found — no numbers, dashboards, or counters anywhere on the site
Founders' / history page	None found
Donation mechanism	None found — no visible donate button, payment gateway, or bank-detail page
Social media links	None found on-site; no linked official profiles located anywhere
Multi-language support	English only; no Urdu or Sindhi version found, despite the Trust's explicit Sindh focus
Branding / logo	No distinct, memorable visual identity located via image search

8.2 Audit Summary (SWOT-style)

STRENGTHS	WEAKNESSES
Clear, focused cause messaging (education + Hepatitis/HIV) — emotionally resonant and locally relevant to Sindh. Several strong impact figures are now confirmed directly by the Trust (Section 6.1), including a dramatic flood-relief story.	Unfinished build (leftover placeholder text); no visuals; no donation path; not mobile-optimized by current standards; effectively invisible on social platforms and search; several programme areas still need numbers confirmed (Section 6.2).
OPPORTUNITIES	THREATS
Almost a blank canvas — a new site can leapfrog competitors with modern design, real stats once gathered, and strong storytelling around the Bilquees/Razia name.	Without verified data and an active digital presence, donor trust and discoverability stay low; competing Sindh-based and national trusts (Section 7) currently out-communicate BRWT online by a wide margin.

SECTION 09

Recommendations for the New “VIP / WOW-Factor” Website

9.1 Information architecture

- Home — strong hero statement, one flagship statistic from Section 6.1 (the flood-relief story — 6,000 people fed daily for three months — is a particularly strong “WOW” candidate), clear donate/volunteer call-to-action
- Our Story — the real history of Bilqees and Razia, once confirmed directly with leadership
- Leadership / Board — full team with photos and bios, not just four names
- Our Work — one page per confirmed program, each with real numbers, photos, and short video if available
- Impact Dashboard — lead with the confirmed figures in Section 6.1 (students trained, eye camps, hand pumps, mass marriages, flood relief); add the Section 6.2 figures once confirmed
- Gallery — photos/video from camps, centres, and events
- Get Involved — donate, volunteer, partner — with a secure payment gateway
- News / Updates — simple blog or activity feed to keep the site alive between major updates
- Contact — address, map, phone, email, and a contact form

9.2 Experience & credibility principles

- Premium, documentary-style photography of real beneficiaries and camps rather than stock imagery, to build the “WOW” and trust factor together.
- Bilingual or trilingual content (English / Urdu / Sindhi) given the Sindh-based audience the Trust explicitly serves.
- Fully responsive, mobile-first layout — most Pakistani site visitors and donors will arrive on mobile.
- Visible trust signals: registration/legal status, audited accounts if available, and direct testimonials once gathered.

PROVIDED BY BRWT — Use Section 6.1 with confidence; treat Section 6.2 with care

The figures in Section 6.1 came directly from BRWT and are ready to publish. For anything still listed in Section 6.2, the same rule from earlier in this report still applies: never publish an estimated or invented number. Where a confirmed figure isn't available yet for launch, describe the programme qualitatively (with photos) rather than displaying a guessed statistic.

SECTION 10

Starter Style Guide for the New Website

BRWT currently has no established visual identity to preserve, which is a genuine opportunity rather than a constraint. The three direction options below are ready to hand to a designer or developer as a starting brief — each is a complete, coherent palette, not just a single colour.

10.1 Colour palette options

Option A — “Trust & Compassion” (recommended default) Deep navy for credibility, warm gold for warmth and generosity. Works well for a health- and education-focused charity; close in spirit to this report's own design.

Deep Navy (#162542) Warm Gold (#BE8C2E) Soft Grey-White (#F4F6FA) Teal accent (#1E6E68)

Option B — “Sindh Warmth” Earth tones drawn from Sindh's landscape and textiles — terracotta and sand with a deep teal anchor. Distinctive and culturally grounded.

Terracotta (#A8462F) Sand Gold (#E8C77E) Deep Teal (#1E4E4A) Warm White (#FAF4EA)

Option C — “Medical Clarity” Clean clinical teal and white with a single warm accent — leans into the Hepatitis/HIV health-awareness mission and reads as modern and credible to medical donors/partners.

Clinical Teal (#0F6E63) White (#FFFFFF) Warm Accent (#F2A341) Ink Navy (#1B2A3A)

10.2 Font pairing suggestions (free Google Fonts — easy for any developer)

Pairing	Headings	Body Text	Feel
1 (used in this report)	Poppins (Bold/Medium)	Lora	Modern + editorial warmth
2	Montserrat (Bold)	Source Serif 4 / Merriweather	Confident, NGO-corporate
3	Lora (Bold)	Inter / Open Sans	Elegant heading, clean body

10.3 Imagery & logo direction

- Commission or design a simple, distinct wordmark/logo — there is currently nothing to build on, so this should be budgeted as part of the website project.
- Plan a one-day photography/video shoot at an active camp or centre early in the project — this single asset bank will do more for the “WOW factor” than any template choice.

- Until real photography exists, use respectful, generic Sindh/Pakistan community-health stock imagery sparingly, and swap it out as real photos arrive — never present stock imagery as if it depicts BRWT's own beneficiaries.

SECTION 11

Recommended Next Step: A Short Conversation With BRWT Leadership

Several items are now answered (Section 6.1) — thank you. The remaining questions below are ready to use for a short follow-up call or visit with the Chairperson's or General Secretary's office, organized to match the gaps listed in Section 6.2:

Topic	Question to ask
History	In what year was the Trust founded, and who were Bilquees and Razia? What is their personal story?
Registration	Under which law/ordinance and authority is the Trust registered, and in what year?
Team	How many paid staff and how many active volunteers currently work across all programs?
Computer education	How many computer labs are currently running, and what is current enrollment? Of the 7,000+ trained, how many were placed in jobs?
Vocational / silai	Does the Trust run vocational or sewing (silai) centres? If so, how many, and how many women/girls have completed training?
Routine medical camps	Outside of disaster response, how many general medical, Hepatitis screening, and HIV screening camps have been held, and how many patients treated in each?
Scholarships	How many students have received scholarships, and at what education levels?
Media assets	Can the Trust provide existing photos/videos — especially from the flood relief operation and eye camps — for the new site's gallery?

SECTION 12

Conclusion

BRWT has a clear and worthwhile mission focused on education, public health, and disaster relief in Sindh — and now has several strong, confirmed figures ready to use, including a genuinely compelling flood-relief story (Section 6.1). The Trust's online presence, however, is still almost invisible, with an unfinished website that reflects none of this real-world impact. This is exactly the situation a strong new website can fix: publish the Section 6.1 figures with confidence, confirm the short remaining list in Section 6.2, and execute the design recommendations and style guide in Sections 9–10 to produce a genuinely premium, credible, donor-ready site.

APPENDIX A

Glossary of Programme Terms Used in This Brief

Included for the design/development team, in case anyone on that team is not familiar with these Pakistan-specific welfare-sector terms.

Term	Plain-English Meaning
Silai centre	A vocational training centre teaching sewing/tailoring (“silai” = sewing), usually to women and girls, as a livelihood skill.
Ijtamai shadi / mass marriage	A combined wedding ceremony organized and funded by a charity for multiple orphaned or low-income couples at once, covering costs the families could not otherwise afford.
Hepatitis screening camp	A free, walk-in public-health event where attendees are tested for Hepatitis B/C, often with on-the-spot referral or treatment for positive cases.
Eye camp	A free outreach event offering eye check-ups, glasses distribution, and often free cataract surgery for those who cannot afford private eye care.
Welfare Trust	A common Pakistani legal structure for a charitable organization, typically registered under a Trust Act or as a non-profit company/association under SECP or provincial Social Welfare Department rules.

Full Source List

All facts in this report are paraphrased summaries of publicly available material. No content has been copied verbatim from any source.

- bilqeesraziatrust.org — BRWT's official website (primary source for Sections 3, 4, 8)
- Direct input from a BRWT representative, provided June 27, 2026 — sole source for Section 6.1's confirmed figures
- General and Urdu-language web search (Google) — used throughout for verification and gap-checking
- Image search — used for Section 8 (branding/logo audit)
- raziasheikhtrust.com — Razia Sheikh Welfare Trust, referenced for benchmarking in Section 7 only

- Bilqees Sarwar Foundation public channels — referenced for benchmarking in Section 7 only
- saylaniwelfare.com — Saylani Welfare Trust, referenced for benchmarking in Section 7 only
- Public NGO directories and forum listings — checked for third-party mentions of BRWT (none found)
